The coronavirus task force of the APSS (health authority) in Trento, Italy, supported by GPI, has recently taken measures to reduce the occasions of contagion from COVID-19. The access to the APSS blood sample premises is only available by appointment since yesterday, so to regulate the inflow of patients in the waiting rooms. It is a procedure to make the ordinary services work in an extraordinary situation. Patients can book their appointment online, calling a dedicated phone number or using the Telegram messaging tool.

The technologies used and the call centre services are provided by GPI, which has promptly answered to the Trento health authority needs and that allowed to keep running the blood sample activities in such a problematic period and to convert an open access service to an only-by-booking service. The reservations have previously been examined to avoid any gathering, maintain at least 1 meter distance between people, in full compliance with the DPCM (Prime Minister Decree), ensuring the maintenance of essential services, such as laboratory tests.
